Lawton's blow lands and Ted sinks unconscious to the flooring. Attracted by the sounds of the conflict, Nellie arrives in time to see her father's visitor being bound. Unknown to her father she several times has met Ted and now recognizes him.

Unable to understand-the situation, she hides and watches until her father and his men go above. Then she reaches Ted's side just as he is regaining consciousness. He replies to her questions with the story of his reasons for visiting the schooner.

Meanwhile the ship has gotten under way and, missing his daughter, Lawton comes below, discovers Nellie talking with Ted and orders her above-but not before she has artfully loosened his bonds and promised to aid his escape that night.

Night comes. Confident that Ted is securely bound. Lawton tumbles into his cabin bunk and soor is asleep and snoring. At midnight a signal tap sounds on the cabin skylight. Cautiously Ted steps from his bonds, creeps from the cabin and up the companion way

Desperately he and Nellie work to lower one of the lifeboots in the inky darkness. A pulley squeaks. The helmsman rouses from a reverie-investigates. The boat is gone! Quickly he rouses Lawton, who orders another boat launched in pursuit .-- Continued to-morrow,
